

How Sister Love Launched The Global Movement To End Breast Cancer

In 1993, two sisters, Nancy Brinker and Susan G. Komen, founded Susan G. Komen for the Cure. Their mission was to end breast cancer forever. At the time, breast cancer was the leading cause of cancer death among women in the United States. Today, thanks to the work of Susan G. Komen, breast cancer is no longer the leading cause of cancer death among women in the United States.

How did Susan G. Komen achieve such remarkable success? The answer lies in the power of sister love.

Nancy and Susan were both diagnosed with breast cancer within a year of each other. Nancy was 36 years old, and Susan was 33. At the time, there was very little information available about breast cancer. Nancy and Susan felt lost and alone. They didn't know where to turn for help.

One day, Nancy and Susan were talking about their experiences with breast cancer. They realized that they could help other women by sharing their story. They decided to write a book called "For Others." The book was a huge success. It sold more than 1 million copies and helped to raise awareness about breast cancer.

In 1993, Nancy and Susan founded Susan G. Komen for the Cure. Their mission was to end breast cancer forever. They started by organizing a race for the cure. The first race was held in Dallas, Texas, and it attracted more than 10,000 participants. The race has since grown into the world's largest 5K race series. In 2019, more than 600,000 people participated in the race worldwide.

Susan G. Komen has also funded more than $2.9 billion in breast cancer research. This research has led to new treatments and therapies that have saved countless lives. Susan G. Komen has also provided support and services to millions of women and families affected by breast cancer.

The story of Susan G. Komen is a story of hope and inspiration. It is a story of how two sisters used their love and passion to make a difference in the world. Susan G. Komen is a global leader in the fight against breast cancer, and its work is saving lives every day.
